Stories from Pompeii

May, 2014

This booklet contains short stories inspired by a dramatised documentary (a BBC production) on the destruction of Pompeii. The students of the second grade (advanced level in English) of the 6th junior high school of Rhodes watched the documentary during their English lesson. They learned related vocabulary to the subject because of a text on the destruction of Pompeii in their textbook. Then they produced their short stories as if they were the survivors of the disaster. They gave me their stories in their USB sticks along with the pictures of Pompeii which they found on the Internet.

The students produced these stories without my interference. I only corrected the syntax and helped them with the vocabulary.

This project proves that technology can be combined with teaching without cutting down the students' creativity and imagination.

Enjoy it!
